

WEISSENHOFMUSEUM / Haus Le Corbusier

Stuttgart

A visit to the Weissenhof Estate reveals the richness of ideas involved in the buildings constructed in 1927 and explains their significance in the history of architecture. A system of signs leads visitors through the estate, providing information about the privately used buildings that are not accessible to visitors. The only building that is open to the public is the museum in the two semidetached houses by Le Corbusier and Pierre Jeanneret.

The presentation on the signs is based on the floorplans from the 1927 book 'Bau und Wohnen' (Building and Living). Ten of the thirty-three original buildings were destroyed during World War II or in the postwar period and replaced by new buildings. A plaque on the Weissenhofwerkstatt shows the plan of the estate and indicates all of the participating architects.

Deutsches Literaturarchiv Marbach

About us

The German Literature Archive (Deutsches Literaturarchiv – DLA) is one of the most significant literary institutions in the world. Its collections bring together and preserve an abundance of valuable sources of literary and intellectual history from 1750 to the present day. Since its establishment in 1955, it has served literature, education and research. The collections are open to everyone who is conducting source criticism.

With around 1,600 papers and collections of authors and scholars, archives of literary publishers and over 450,000 images and objects, the archive is one of the leading institutions of its kind. The library is the largest special collection of modern German literature and includes more than 1.5 million items (books, periodicals as well as analog and digital text, sound and visual media), alongside the collected libraries of more than 160 authors and collectors.

The DLA, in cooperation with other institutions and universities, carries out interdisciplinary and international research projects with the support of external funds.

Opening hours

Museum of Modern Literature: Tuesday – Sunday: 10 am – 5 pm
Mondays closed, except on public holidays

The Schiller National Museum is expected to be closed until autumn 2023 for exhibition renovations.
